Team Reflection - Yavin - Week 8

The eighth and final week of the project really consisted of concluding everything, such as presenting the project to both our stakeholder and our supervisors in the course. The development part of our App was finished last week, so this week, instead, we prepared the presentation that was held in front of the class. More importantly, to the finished product, we also had the last meeting with our stakeholder, where we showcased the resulting application in this limited project. The stakeholder received what was requested in earlier stakeholder meetings of the project and a little bit more. Consequently, the stakeholder was left very happy and satisfied with the finished application.

To conclude, this course has left us with a different approach to working with anything. To constantly question if we are working on the right path, or if there is some other, more effective, way of doing what is in front of us. This will most certainly prove useful in future endeavors that each team member embarks on, and that we are very happy about.
